Jobsrmine website redesign

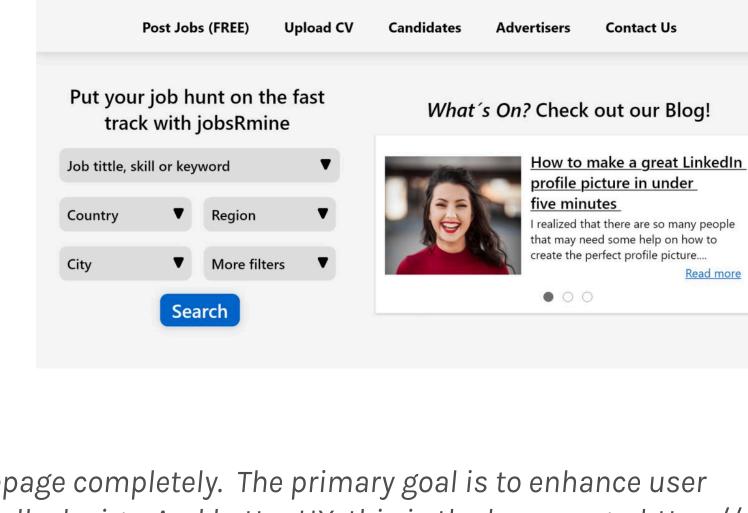

Design process

Jobsrmine is a website to search and post job vacancies. It has very interesting features such as a search engine that uses certain filters to display specific openings, allows employers to post vacancies, a blog with very useful articles, templates for creating your CV, among other things.

The client wants to completely redesign their website because they consider the design of their page to be outdated and not visually appealing. Currently, they are only requesting a redesign of the Almost at the end, there's a section showing visa-required vacancies abroad. Finally, in the footer, we can see information regarding trademark registration and social media. I was interested by the "quick links" section, which displays quick access links to different pages on the site. I think placing it at the bottom isn't practical since it's difficult to find.

I used the "Segoe UI" font for the text, it's a very clean and legible rounded sans serif typeface with subtitles, I used the semibold version to create contrast while maintaining consistency across the rounded edges, which makes it feel visually appealing, even with a large amount of text. For titles and Customer request "I'm looking for a skilled designer to revamp our homepage completely. The primary goal is to enhance user engagement through a more appealing and user-friendly design. And better UX. this is the homepage https:// www.jobsrmine.com. Majority of visitors and target audience are from US, UK and the EU The current design is a bit dated and needs to evolve with time.we are going to introduce AI features too. If we like the design, we may work with the designer to change the rest of the pages throughout our portal. Do not Note: Red is not my brand colour"

This is the proposal for the redesign of the JobsRmine homepage. This job was posted by a client in the United Kingdom through the site "freelancer.com."
